Pat Severturn says what most of us have thought about our jobs, managers, and employers in this humorous riff on self-help guides. He offers true stories (yes, they really happened) and advice that you'll actually want to follow the next time a boss undermines you or has a ridiculous request. It's a book for disgruntled employees (and aren't we all at times?), workers close to retirement, and fresh meat who haven't yet had their souls destroyed by toxic managers. It will help you do your job—and do it well—while flying under the radar. You will learn how to avoid pointless meetings, how to stay away from micromanagement, and how to stay on track until it's time to retire. Expect to make a good income but have more time for family and friends. You'll feel happier, more relaxed, and—dare we say—excited about going to work. Most call this the allusive work-life balance. It's out there. Pat will help you find it.

About the Author Pat Severturn is a wise-cracking guy in his fifties who managed to stay sane while working in the corporate world for more than thirty years. In that time, he made a few bucks, raised wonderful children, and kept smiling through it all.
