The Guy that Got Trump, not only got Trump; he totally got my attention. This guy has lived more and done more in One Lifetime, than 10 other normal people combined. Who else could "One Up Trump?" Probably, nobody else, would be my guess. The stories in this book are just Crazy Awesome. I forgot all about my ordinary life and was virtually living the insanity and hilarity that is woven into the fabric of this guys existence. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. I love Ron's (GORBY) accounts of impersonating Mikhail Gorbachev captured in this book. I most appreciate Ron's chutzpa and boldness in the way he has created the opportunities. I hope you enjoy his accounts as much as I. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Joker with a Heart By hummers Ron Knapp, the author has a wonderful ability to relay his life's adventures. A fearless and humorous storyteller. He definitely has made his own history and made it come to life in this book.

In December of 1988, Mikhail Gorbachev, Secretary General of the Soviet Union, came to address the United Nations. Ronald Knapp went to New York for one day to do a segment on Fox TV with Gordon Elliott's "Good Day, New York," knocking on doors in New Jersey the same day Gorbachev was arriving. He was so successful that Fox said, "Let's hire a limo and turn him loose on New York." The Gorbachev motorcade was on one street, and Gorby 2 was on another. Gorby 2 shook hands with 100,000 New Yorkers who thought they shook hands with Gorbachev. Even Donald Trump came out of Trump Tower to greet him. The Fox TV cameras captured it for the evening news on Maury Povich's "Current Affairs." Trump denied he had been fooled, but New Yorkers were convinced otherwise. Everywhere Gorby 2 went in Manhattan, people would stop him on the street and say, "You're the guy who got Trump." This was just the beginning of the outrageous adventures he shares in this book.

"Gorby lights up a room like the Sun was shining from the ceiling. We call him Gorby the Great. Gorby has no clue what fear is because he's never felt it." -Rick Marlin, Music Promoter and Entrepreneur "A memorable storyteller requires audacity, possessing daring, boldness, courage, and the uncanny ability to be an impostor, to pretend to be somebody else. These two impulses beat strongly in Gorby 2's chameleon life." -Phil Cousineau, author of Wordcather and The Painted Word "Gorby 2 is in tune with the cosmic play of God's universe. He can ad-lib any situation because he sees life as God's joke. He is the quintessential cosmic entertainer." -Boris Fritz, Sr. Engineer, Northrop and Vedic Historian "Ron Knapp, Gorby 2, is a man with infinite stories that keep you captivated and fascinated through his panache and creative genius. He can read the future." -"T" Tyner, Armament Design Conceptualizer "Gorby 2 lifts up the real Gorbachev by honoring his place in history and expresses his good fortune in looking like someone for whom the world has such great respect." -Fr. Joe Scerbo, S.A., M.A., M.T.S., Ph.D. "Ronald Knapp has the chutzpa to make one believe that he's the real Gorby." -Howard Avedis, Independent Filmmaker About the Author Ronald V. Knapp was born in Windsor, Ontario to an Irish mother and spirited Seneca Indian father who burned their house down on his first birthday for payment by an insurance company for advertisement. When he was five years old, his Irish grandmother came to Canada, seized his mother and the three children, and took them under pursuit to Detroit to live with his grandparents. . That was the last contact he had with his father who moved to Montreal, owned the Blue Bonnet Race Track and the Upsal Chemical company, served as Under-Secretary of State for Prime Minister Pearson, got mixed up with the wrong people, and was murdered when Ron was 28. His grandfather, James J. O'Callaghan, was Henry Ford's first worker; and during the war his mother worked as Rosie the Riveter. Ron attended Catholic schools and at 16 was a Holy Cross Brother for Notre Dame. He received too many letters from girls and went back to Detroit where his first job, while attending the University of Detroit, was with the U.S. Gypsum Company, measuring ship loads on the Great Lakes. He was drafted in 1961 and served in the U.S. Army during the Viet Nam era, even though he had dual citizenship. He spent the majority of his military service close to God and away from the front as Head Chaplin Assistant at Fort Lewis, Washington. He married and fathered six children while working and going part-time to school. When he finally graduated from Cal State Fullerton the Business Department acknowledged him as the student with the most responsibilities and had his whole family come up on the stage. For twenty years Ron worked as Plant Manager for McDonnell Douglas in Overhaul and Repair, with hundreds of DC9's and 10's under his supervision. He is the inventor of the Emergency Exit System currently in every commercial aircraft in the world. In 1987 his resemblance to Mikhael Gorbachev catapulted him into a celebrity position that unfolded serendipitously. He was invited by Fox television to NYC for Good Day, New York with Gordon Eliot on the day that Gorbachev came to address the UN. Fox took him to New Jersey at 7:00 a.m. and had him knock on doors and talk to people. He was so successful that Fox hired a limo and took him to NYC with three TV cameras at the same time that Gorbachev's entourage was arriving. They had parallel parade routes, and Ron shook hands with thousands of New Yorkers who thought he was Gorbachev, including Donald Trump.
